The pilgrim knocked at the gate and waited for St. Peter to open.

"Well, who are you?" asked Peter.

"One who would fain enter."

"Those who enter here must show cause," said Peter. "What have you to say for yourself?"

"Very little," said the pilgrim.

"While on earth I tried to treat my family as cordially as I treated my customers, and I never laughed at a mother-in-law joke, and—"

"That's enough!" exclaimed Peter. "You walk right over there and pick out your own harp and crown."—Commoner.
